About the Pacific Ocean...

The probable existence of an ocean westward of America first became known to the Spanish discoverers of the New World as an established fact on September 25, 1513, when Basco Nuñez de Balboa marched across what is now known as the Isthmus of Panama. On arriving at the foot of the hill, from the summit of which he was told that this unknown sea would become visible, he ascended alone and on seeing the broad expanse of water opening to his astonished gaze, fell on his knees and thanked heaven for having bestowed on him the honor of being the first European to have this great ocean revealed to him. Ferdinand Magellan, the great Portuguese navigator, was the first to cross the ocean in the years 1520 and 1521. Acting under commission from the Spanish King Charles I, he named it the "Pacific" Ocean.

The Pacific, which has an area of some 63,986,000 square miles, is of course the largest of the oceans being more than twice the size of the Atlantic Ocean and occupying nearly half of the Earth's surface. From the Bering Strait, the only outlet to the Arctic Ocean in the north, it stretches 9,455 miles south to the Antarctic and reaches 10,492 miles in an east-west direction at its broadest point. The average depth is 14,000 feet but to the west of the Philippine Islands, huge trenches give rise to some of the world's greatest known depths and for many years the 35,640 feet Challenger Deep was thought to be the deepest. However, on January 23, 1960, the United States bathyscaphe 'Trieste' touched bottom in the Marianas Trench at 36,198 feet - just about six miles! Over 1,000 flat-topped submarine islands, many of them more than 3,000 feet in height, lie about one mile beneath the surface of the Pacific Ocean.

FROM THE NAVIGATOR

During the night Pacific Sun will maintain a south westerly course heading towards Brisbane. In the morning hours we will transit the Grand Passage in between Atoll Pelotas and Grand Lagoon North. Late afternoon, around 1900 hours Pacific Sun will transit the passage in between Fairway reefs and Landsdowne banks. During our sea passage we can expect to experience the southeasterly trade winds on our portside. They are known as "trade winds" from the great regularity with which they blow through the year from about latitude 30 towards the equator, thus assisting the ships which used to carry trade around the world in the days before steam propulsion. The average trade wind speed is between 10 and 15 knots and they are more constant during the winter time.
